ABSTRACT

The present invention relates generally to animal breeding methods. More specifically, the invention relates to methods for selecting for robustness among two or more animals based upon the quantity of immune cell subtypes and frequency of proliferative responses of lymphocytes in the animals.